Based on the results, the foundry engineers will further analyze the red and blue regions in the new mould. Since these regions appear in more than one casting, the production process has a certain probability to produce defects in these parts.